A 26-year-old founder has a solution to what Bill Gates calls an 'unnecessary roadblock' to college — and her startup is helping students get thousands off their tuition

y	There is a way for students to get free financial aid from the government, but the process can be arduous.	Advertisement ρ f	In May, billionaire Microsoft founder Bill Gates published an article advocating for a simplified process of the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, or FAFSA. Gates said the application has 108 questions — three times the length of a standard federal income tax form.
Ď f	"Without financial aid, many students drop out of school or decide not to go to college at all," Gates wrote. "At a time when our country needs more college graduates, the financial aid application process has become an unnecessary roadblock on the path to a higher education degree."	Advertisement
Ö	Charlie Javice, a 26-year-old University of Pennsylvania grad, recognized the same problem as Gates. In late 2016 and early 2017, Javice sat with close to 1,000 students in the South Bronx helping them fill out financial aid request forms.	Advertisement
f y	"Just by sitting and counseling all of these students — every story is unique but every problem is kind of a pattern that emerges, and it's how you can fix a piece of technology and application process that dates back to the 50s," Javice told Business Insider.	Advertisement
